C4E News

A monthly round-up of C4E news and information

Getting underway!

I am excited to be underway with the C4E. If you have news you want to share in next month's newsletter, just send it to me!

November highlights

I am launching a C4E podcast! I want to use each episode as a way of getting to know all of you and to share your ideas with the world for how we can solve some of our thorniest environmental challenges. Podcast episodes will be released starting in early January. I'm looking for title suggestions, so send me your ideas.

Coming soon...

We are currently recruiting a C4E administrative staff member, I look forward to getting them on board soon.

I will be sending out a poll to find a good time for a kick-off reception and brainstorming work session to prepare for the 2024 Global Environmental Forum. I'm aiming for early January but let's see what everyone's availability is.

We need a logo! I am working with the Office of Marketing and Communications to develop something in line with the university's brand guidelines.

We are up here!

Right here!

A peak inside.

We have space, but many of you may not know where it is. We are on the second floor of Melville Library. My C4E office is here, along with several other offices and space for casual meetings or other group activities. We also have a conference room that we share with Sustainabilities. If you would like to book the C4E conference room for C4E-related events or meetings, you can do so by adding the C4E calendar to your Google calendar using the invite link here and you can book a room with the instructions here.
